The following Fellows were elected :

John H. Beach, G. T. Bonner, Henry T. Cary, James M. Drake.

Judge Daly said the meeting had been called to do honor to Lieut. Greely and his surviving companions, Sergeant Long and Private Connell, who were present on the platform. He spoke briefly of Arctic explorations and the great scientific value of expeditions like the one conducted by Lieut. Greely. He then introduced Secretary Hall, who pointed out on the map the routes followed by the explorers, who preceded Greely. The President then introduced Lieut. Greely, who was received with great applause, and proceeded to give a simple and direct account of the adventures and hardships of the expedition. He spoke with great emotion of the conduct of his men, two of whom were with him, while the other three, Brainerd, Fredericks, and Beiderleck, were still too weak to be abroad. He paid a tribute to Lieut. Lockwood, who had reached the highest latitude ever attained by civilized man.

At the conclusion of his address Vice-President Hitchcock spoke of the great moral as well as scientific value of Arctic explorations, which were worth, he said, ten times over all that they had cost in sacrifice and suffering and material loss by the additions they had made to the record of human courage and heroism and unselfishness.

Prof. Dwight, of Columbia College, then read a brief paper on the same subject, and Gen. Viele offered a resolution expressive of the Society's admiration of Lieut. Greely and his party.

This was passed by acclamation, and the Society, on motion, adjourned.

Judge Daly then introduced Lieut. Schwatka, U.S.A., who gave an interesting lecture on "Alaska, and Exploration along the Yukon River," with an account of his raft-journey, the longest ever made. The lecturer thought that the value of Alaska had always been underestimated, and he believed that its resources were very great.

The lecture was illustrated by a number of views of the remarkable scenery along the river.
